After a typically quiet start to the year, things are hotting up. As the weather, we hope, slowly gets warmer there's a great deal to tempt us away from the telly before the lassitude of seriously warm weather sets in.

February brings the fifth Ealing Music and Film Valentine Festival. Several of their events are shown here on our Drama and Music pages, but there is much more on their website including music of all sorts and film screenings, with a heavy emphasis on Ealing Studios, so do take a look online if you can; the address is shown on the centre-spread advert. The Festival isn't just a junket: its surplus is used to support young people's artistic development, so while enjoying the events you can feel you're doing a bit of good as well.

The Festival is undoubtedly the centrepiece of this issue, but there's so much more going on. Why not take a peep at a section of the Diary which you wouldn't expect to interest you? There's an amazing range of things to go to and to take part in.

I've said it before: aren't we lucky to live in Ealing!

It is 1989. Katerina Turenkova, survivor of the Soviet Gulag and winner of the Nobel Prize for Literature, is living as a recluse in a remote house in the Peak District, surrounded by barbed wire and watched over by CCTV cameras. The arrival of three students anxious to persuade Katerina to let them stage a production of her most famous novel is the starting point for this taut political thriller, a gripping and darkly humorous exploration of betrayal in every form – political, personal and sexual.

SCARBOROUGH by Fiona Evans

Drama of forbidden love

A shabby bed and breakfast in Scarborough: two people arrive for an illicit weekend.

But they are afraid to go out. After all, one is a fifteen year old child, the other is their teacher. A weekend that starts with enthusiasm and laughter ends in pain and loss.

But who is the more hurt, and who will bear the scars?

This is a thought-provoking play that is likely to challenge your preconceptions.

MENDELSSOHN: ELIJAH

Sinfonia Britannica, conducted by Thomas Blunt

Elijah was composed for the Birmingham Festival of 1846, just a year before Mendelssohn's early death. It is a work of tremendous dramatic scope, chronicling episodes in the life of the Old Testament prophet Elijah – including the contest of the gods, the miracle of raising the dead, the bringing of rain to a parched Israel and his ascension on a fiery chariot into heaven.
